

Quality use of medicines and medical testing as experienced by Aboriginal Health Workers (AHWs) in North Queensland

Speakers:

Jo McMahon—Senior Pharmacist and Educator

Jennie Pry—Design Lead, NPS MedicineWise

Jane London—Program and Service Design Manager, NPS MedicineWise

Workshop description

A one day workshop co-facilitated with local Aboriginal and Torres Strait health facilitators and health workers to name the challenges and explore possible solutions for quality use of medicines and medical test issues as experienced by AHWs. The focus will be on listening to the stories about use of medicines in their communities and the evidence for the key role that AHWs play in supporting their clients to better use medicines. We will utilise the principles from human-centred design to empathise and understand the real issues, name the problems, and brainstorm possible solutions.

Learning objectives:

- to identify the components and challenges for AHWs who want to implement QUM/MT in their communities
- to provide opportunity for AHWs to generate new concepts and co-design solutions for implementing QUM/MT in their communities
- to inform and plan an integrated approach for next stages of a QUM/MT upskilling project across the NQPHN footprint.

Who should attend:

- AHWs
- Aboriginal health service employers.
