

Men's Health Breakfast: Misconceptions in Men's Health

Speaker: Prof. Robert McLachlan

There is a mine field of misinformation particularly on the internet when it comes to men's reproductive health. Testosterone supplements, cures for fertility, and sexual dysfunction medications that have no quality scientific research to support their claims can be dangerous to the health and wellbeing of generally vulnerable men.

Andrology Australia is the leading authority for male reproductive health and provides a wealth of information to support health professionals through education and clinical resources, as well as providing evidence-based information for the general public. Andrology Australia urges all men with reproductive problems to see a GP and be wary of the misleading information and advertisements via websites and social media.
